Denver—May 26, 2016—Next spring, the Denver Art Museum and Clyfford Still Museum will unite the work of two artists separated by generations in a creative collaboration. Shade: Clyfford Still / Mark Bradford includes an exhibition at the Denver Art Museum (DAM) of new paintings by renowned contemporary American artist Mark Bradford, who deeply admires Clyfford Still's art, as well as a unique presentation of Still's work curated by Bradford at the Clyfford Still Museum (CSM). Bradford was honored in 2014 with the U.S. Department of State's Medal of Arts and notably was recently named as the U.S. representative at the 2017 Venice Biennale. A traveling exhibition organized by Buffalo's Albright-Knox Art Gallery, Shade opened in Buffalo on May 25, 2016, and will be on view to Denver audiences at DAM and CSM April 9–July 16, 2017. The presentation at CSM continues the museum's Artists Select program, which invites contemporary artists to curate works from the museum's holdings to explore Still's legacy and the inspiration each draws from Still's work.

"This exhibition takes our partnership with the Clyfford Still Museum to new heights," said Christoph Heinrich, Frederick and Jan Mayer Director of the DAM. "By visiting the exhibition at DAM and CSM, visitors will gain a deeper understanding of the connection between Bradford's work and Still's abstractions as they relate to the legacy of abstract expressionism."

CSM Director Dean Sobel added, "We are particularly excited to present this exhibition, which reveals the continued importance and meaning of Still's work among artists of our time. It is our mission to bring greater visibility to Still's work both locally and internationally, and this partnership with DAM will help to illuminate Still's vision for Denver audiences through the eyes of a prominent contemporary artist."

DAM's exhibition will be an expanded presentation of the Albright-Knox's, and will feature paintings that Bradford recently created, presented alongside related canvases by Clyfford Still. To create a body of work specifically for the Albright-Knox presentation, Bradford built on his interest in crafting paintings that explore the underpinnings of expressionistic abstraction in the 21st century. He drew inspiration from the large-scale and tactile surfaces of Still's work, including Still's use of black, brown and other somber colors that Bradford employed for both their symbolic and expressive qualities. Rebecca Hart, curator of modern and contemporary art, will curate DAM's presentation of the exhibition in the Museum's Gallagher Family Gallery.

"The title Shade has rich implications such as to shelter from light, to be in a shadow or to add black to a hue to darken it," said Hart. "Both Clyfford Still and Mark Bradford have a unique relationship to black. At a time when other Abstract Expressionist painters had vibrant palettes, Still used black to force viewers out of their comfort zones. For Bradford, the choice of black isn't neutral; it intentionally forces us to confront conventional notions of race. Each viewer will interpret the use of black differently, hopefully evoking emotions that connect them to the works on view."

Bradford's curation of Still's work at CSM will feature approximately fifteen works that prominently incorporate black pigments, spanning five decades. The selection reveals Bradford's appreciation for Still's frequent use of black and for Still's many evocative statements about the color, including, "Black was never a color of death and terror for me. I think of it as warm and generative." Bradford's curation will be featured in the Museum's two largest galleries. This exhibition marks the Museum's third installment of its Artists Select series, which began in 2015 with an exhibition curated by visual artist and composer Mark Mothersbaugh, and continues in early 2017 with an exhibition curated by contemporary artist and filmmaker Julian Schnabel.

Bradford believes his new work for this exhibition is in dialogue with Still's. He recalled seeing a Still painting for the first time: "What caught my eye was the insistence of his paintings. His surfaces were more raw and immediate than other abstract expressionist paintings. His paintings are not just optical—they have a very physical presence." In comparing his studio process with Still's, Bradford said, "My paintings are made up of tearing. To me it represents a process that is more of a reality than laying down a perfect line of paint. It's raw and violent but it still comes together. And it's not just a tearing that you see in Still's paintings, it's a collision of colors. There aren't smooth transitions."

Visitors to both DAM and CSM's presentations of Shade will see Bradford's take on abstractions of class, culture, race and gender. Social activism and art will be explored further through programming at both museums, inspired by Bradford's Art + Practice Foundation, which he founded with philanthropist and collector Eileen Harris Norton and social activist Allan DiCastro. Art + Practice aims to empower foster youth and strengthen communities through contemporary art. The Foundation also encourages life-skills training through educational and cultural experiences.

Visit each museum's website for further details on opening weekend events, public tours and programming.
